Expertise: Federal budget, domestic human resources policy

The holder of a Ph.D. in economics from the University of California, Los Angeles, John Cogan is a former deputy director of the U.S. Office of Management and Budget. He is also a professor, by courtesy, in Stanford University's Public Policy Program and serves on faculty advisory boards for the Stanford-in-Washington campus, the Stanford-in-Government Program, the Stanford College Republicans, the International Policy Studies Program, and the Stanford Institute for Economic Policy Research. His current research focuses on the U.S. budget and fiscal policy, Social Security, and the determinants of congressional election outcomes. His book The Budget Puzzle (1994), coauthored with Tim Muris and Alan Schick, explores the role that the budget process and other factors play in creating national budget deficits. He was appointed by President Bush to serve on a bipartisan commission on Social Security reform in 2001.
