I recently came across an old editorial about American soldiers caught in a seemingly endless war abroad. "Had there been any honorably unending war abroad. It gets worse. Do bullies get their comeuppance after high school?"

Why the regulators and the bankers can’t be friends

There are plenty of anti-technology momentum and Fannie Mae’s storied history. The concept of owning your home began with the housing idea of Henry Ford: “A house is a place where your heart can rest; it is an oasis in a desert of noise and confusion.” The idea of owning your home has been around for a long time, but it was not until the late 19th century that homeownership became widely adopted. This was due, in part, to the rise of the mortgage industry and the development of mortgage loan programs.

The limitations of traditional mortgage lending are significant. For example, traditional mortgage lending often requires a down payment of at least 20% of the home’s value, which can be a barrier for many potential homebuyers. Additionally, traditional mortgage lending often requires a credit score of at least 620, which can exclude many borrowers who have had credit issues in the past.

In contrast, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have provided a much-needed alternative to traditional mortgage lending. These government-sponsored enterprises have made it possible for millions of Americans to become homeowners, even if they have less than perfect credit histories. In fact, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have the track record of making affordable housing available to all income levels, not just those with perfect credit.
